

Favorite artist

Name:

Bob Marley was a Jamaican reggae legend known for promoting peace, unity, and social justice through music. Rising to fame with The Wailers, he released iconic albums like Exodus and Uprising, and timeless songs such as "One Love" and "Redemption Song." He died in 1981 but remains a global cultural icon.

How/When:

I found out about him through my mum. We were travelling to another town when one of his songs came on the playlist, and immediately I found joy in his music.

Why:

I really respect him because, as far as I can tell, he never let fame or money corrupt his message. He seemed to have been a man of integrity who sang about what he knew about.

Favorite movie

Name:

Oppenheimer (2023), directed by Christopher Nolan, tells the story of J. Robert Oppenheimer and his role in creating the atomic bomb during World War II. The film explores his internal conflicts, ethical dilemmas, and the far-reaching consequences of his work, with Cillian Murphy portraying the troubled scientist.

How/When:

I remember finding out about this movie due to all the memes entailed to it. Even without the memes I would have watched it anyway because of my mother.

Why:

It's my favourite movie due to all the special effects, script, actors and over all, the subliminal messaging behind what feels like every second of the movie.

Favorite songName:

"Sultans of Swing" is a song by Dire Straits, released in 1978 and re-released in 1979. Written by Mark Knopfler, it features a clean, melodic sound with jazz and roots rock influences, and includes bass, drums, keyboards, and vocals. The track became a hit following the success of their debut album.

How/When:

"We are the Sultans of Swing".

I found out about this song while listening to random playlists on Youtube.

Why:

This is my favorite song because it doesn't sound repetitive, as the whole lyrics feel different.
